

Surgeons removed the tumor and upper portion of the diseased humerus, 1, then harvested the fibula along with the needed vascular tissue, 2, and finally implanted it in the arm, replacing the upper humerus and reconnecting the vasculature, 3.